• What do CIA Director Stansfield Turner, FBI Director William Webster and Barbara Walters have in common? The three of them will speak at the Washington Press Club dinner for editors April 11, and club president Bill Eaton's been trying to figure out a similarity between them ever since all three accepted. Then why this combination? "The editors asked for Turner and Webster and then expressed an interest in hearing someone speak on media diplomacy," was Eaton's explanation. So they will hear High Spy Turner, Top Cop Webster and Ambassador Walters. They might have also heard Director Castro if Fidel had accepted the club's invitation, issued when the WPC went on its Cuban junket. The annual dinner will be held at the Hyatt Regency for the first time, with no dancing afterwards at the request of the editors.
